The story of Christopher

Christopher had been struggling with back problems for quite some time, and had undergone two surgeries on herniated discs in his lower back and neck. Yet he was not the kind of person to let the pain and discomfort get in the way of enjoying life and being out on the beat.

One day, out for a long run, Christopher heard a popping sound in his back, followed by intense pain in his left leg. Over the following weeks the pain persisted and his left knee became weak and he decided to undergo decompression surgery. But the operation proved difficult, and Christopher had complications, for which he needed repair surgery.

Discharged from hospital and a month into recovery, Christopher felt worried and frustrated to find that he still needed crutches to move about. On leave from the force and confused by everything that had happened to him, Christopher wondered if he would ever be able to walk on his own again, let alone regain a normal, active life. He decided to contact Best Doctors for a second medical opinion.

After an exhaustive review, the expert concluded that surgery had been the right thing to do, yet had caused serious neurological injury. But in his opinion, Christopher had a very good chance of walking on his own again, but needed to give his nervous system a chance to recover. He provided Christopher with treatment recommendations and additional information.

“Reading my report, I could see that I’m looking at things much more positively now. The fact that Best Doctors is included in my Police Federation insurance scheme has made such a difference to me. I can’t thank you enough for all the help I have received.”

For Christopher, the Best Doctors report was the decisive push he needed to press on with his recovery. Having finally traded in his crutches for a walking stick, he is now building up time on the treadmill and is able to take his dogs for a walk.
