Let's Talk Gambling

Gambling comes in many shapes and forms, from betting on the horse racing to entering the National Lottery. While gambling can be fun, there are some downsides. These include financial implications, like running up large debts, damaging your chances of borrowing money or even securing a mortgage in the future. Gambling can also lead to mental health, sleep and relationship problems.

If you need a longer break? You can self-exclude from gambling firms for a minimum of 6 months - those who are aware that they have a gambling problem, have the right to 'self-exclude' by putting yourself on a register, which means you are no longer permitted to gamble for a period of time, of at least 6 months. This means if you do have a bad day or get drunk and are tempted to gamble you can't.

Many feel this self-exclusion framework isn't good enough and doesn't work entirely as you have to register separately with each type of gambling provider.

Read more about Self-exclusion and how to register.

Read the terms and conditions - by taking the time to read the T&Cs, you can ensure you understand exactly what you are gambling on, and what restrictions are attached to promotions and bonus offers (such as a minimum spend level before the bonus is paid) - this will help you make an informed decision.

Make sure the website you're gambling with is licensed - this means you'll be protected by gambling and consumer protection rules in Great Britain.

Licensed gambling businesses must display that they are licensed and provide a link to our licence register where you can see what type of activities they are allowed to offer and also if we have taken any regulatory action against them.

Gambling problems

Gambling can lead to problem debt. Worrying about money can be extremely stressful and may lead to mental health conditions.

Is your gambling causing a problem for you or others around you? The following signs may indicate a problem:

- spending more money and time on gambling than you can afford
- finding it hard to manage or stop your gambling
- having arguments with family or friends about money and gambling
- losing interest in usual activities or hobbies like going out with friends or spending time with family
- always thinking or talking about gambling
- lying about your gambling or hiding it from other people
- chasing losses or gambling to get out of financial trouble
- gambling until all of your money is gone
- borrowing money, selling possessions or not paying bills in order to pay for gambling
- needing to gamble with larger amounts of money or for a longer time to get the same feeling of excitement or buzz
- using gambling as a way to deal with other problems or emotions in your life
- neglecting work, school, family, personal needs or household responsibilities because of gambling
- feeling anxious, worried, guilty, depressed or irritable. Extreme emotions or mood swings
- having difficulty sleeping
- having suicidal thoughts

If you answered yes to any of these questions, gambling could be a problem. If you're not sure how your gambling is affecting you at this stage, complete a self-assessment here.

According to the Royal College of Psychiatrists, problem gamblers are more likely than others to suffer from low self-esteem, develop stress-related disorders, to become anxious, have poor sleep and appetite, to develop a substance misuse problem and suffer from depression. Also, people with mental health problems have a higher than average risk of engaging in problem gambling while unwell.

Although a lot of people gamble to escape feelings of depression or other mental health problems, gambling can actually make these conditions worse.

If you gamble a lot yourself, you may have found the 'high' of anticipating 'the big win' to be extremely exciting, perhaps better than the feelings you experience taking part in any other activity. You may also have found the devastation of losing to be a massive low, leading to feelings of despair.

Feelings of loss and despair following a gambling spree can lead to greater desires to gamble straight away in order to try and get back on a 'high'. However, by continuing to gamble, any negative feelings will only get worse.

It is important to speak to professionals if you are worried about the impact of gambling on your mental health. Speak to your GP initially, they may then refer you to specialist services. If you are concerned about your gambling, call the National Gambling Helpline, details can be found in the how to get help section below.

With other addictions, such as drugs or alcohol, there is a limit to how much a person's body can take before they need medical intervention. Gambling is not like that, and often a downward spiral can continue unchecked for a long time. Especially if large amounts of debt are involved, it can seem as though there is no other option. It is therefore important to get help quickly.

If you have self-harmed or had suicidal thoughts or feelings, it is really important to seek professional help as soon as possible.

You can speak to your GP or find NHS support, or you call a specialist organisation, details are given in the how to get help section below.

If you are concerned that your relationship with a problem gambler is becoming extremely unhealthy or even violent, it is important to seek help for yourself. Likewise if you feel your children are impacted in an unhealthy way it is important to take action.

If you are concerned about someone's gambling, it's important to try to understand what they are going through.

If someone feels they are understood, they are more likely to talk openly and honestly, which will allow you to develop and negotiate a plan together.

Relationships

Having a gambling problem can also have a devastating impact on your relationships with other people.

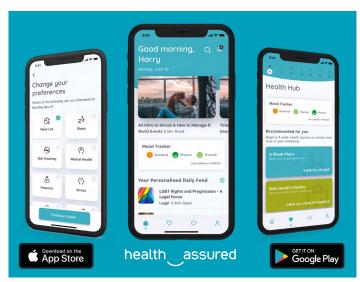

If all of your time and attention is taken up with gambling, friends and family may feel like you don't care about them anymore. Lying, breaking promises and constantly missing important events can mean your loved ones lose trust in your relationships, and this is very hard to repair. Your loved ones may also start to feel guilty about the situation, especially if they do not realise that you are gambling, as they may think that they are doing something to drive you away.

Problem gambling in a family can also have an effect on children. The impact of stress within the family unit and potential loss of relationship with a parent can have lasting consequences.

Once a problem gambler seeks help and enters recovery there can be an opportunity to reestablish relationships. Rebuilding trust can be a difficult task but relationships can heal once the gambler enters recovery. Breaking an addiction is a very difficult process. Recovery takes time, hard work and commitment.
